Cleveland, July 11.—Cleveland has gone on record as a Sunday ball city in spite of all theroposition and no effort was made to interfere with yesterday's game or any protest whatsoever. It was only with great effort that the grounds were put in condition for playing, for the heavy rain that fell up to within a few minutes of the time of the game flooded the grounds.

There were fans so fatigued that even under these conditions, and while the sky was black with clouds and showers were falling every ten minutes, they were present just the same, and the audience numbered nearly a thousand. Rain fell in intervals for the first few innings, but the game was played just the same, and the consummation of the victory for Sunday baseball accomplished. John Powell, the player who was tried on the Sunday ball case, won as decisive a victory as he did in the courts, and won a decision which can never be reversed.

It was Cleveland's great stick work that acted as Powell's attorney in this case, and there was no getting away from the argument advanced.

Tommy Hinkley seemed to be a little off on legal points at times, and many were the objections that he was forced to overrule. While the score shows that Powell was hit fairly hard, it was not until Cleveland had a big lead, and then almost invariably when two men were out. The young twirler pitched a steady and careful game throughout, had excellent control, and kept his record clean.

The wet and slippery grounds made numerous plays that were very much on the farce comedy order, but they were almost without exception on Washington's part. The locals played remarkably well, particularly Chiles, who converted pretty much the whole side of his lot. Washington's run were made as follows:

In the third, German's force out, after Powell's error had given O'Brien a start, a base on balls, and DeMontville's single gave one. In the fifth, singles by Brown, Seibach, McGuire and Tucker, and Powell's wild throw gave three.

THE COLTS' BAD FIELDING.

It Enables the Brooklyn to Win From Them Easily.

Chicago, July 11.—Inability to connect with Pitcher Dunn's curves and rank fielding errors were responsible for the defeat of the Colts today. Dunn used a change of speed and a wide outburst against which the home battlers were powerless. Grinn was not hit hard in any inning except the eighth, when four hits were bunched for three runs.
